To speak of the trio who are to support Mad. Cecilia Kretschmar on this occasion would be a waste of time. The Explosion Testerday at the Arsenal. PURTHER DETAILS AND PARTICULARS. THE CORONER'S INQUEST.

The excitement attendant upon the terrible explosion and loss of life at the Arsenal yesterday was kept up throughout the entire day. An excited crowd of relatives of the laboratory employees, parents, brothers, sisters, anxious as to the fate of those dear to them, thronged about the outer gate leading to the Arsenal, and the scenes here were heart-rending. In the early part of the afternoon, in order to prevent confusion inside the grounds, an order was lesued restricting the number of persons permitted to enter. A few females and those outside gave vent to their feelings in bitter wailing very distressing to hear.

In the immediate vicinity of the accident, inside of the Arsenal grounds proper, the charred remains of those who had perished were laid upon the ground and covered over with canvass.

Many inquiries were made for missing parties, and by these inquiries we learned the names of the following as sufferers and dead: Sallie McElfresh, badly burnt, and taken to the hospital, and has since died. Annie Bates, also in hospital, and badly burnt. Miss Carr, Northern Liberties, supposed to be among the killed. Mrs. Scott, G street south, leg badly burned. Millie Webster, who lives on 6th street, Island, was reported killed, but we have subsequently learned that she was not at work yesterday, and is consequently safe. Maggie Yonson, 7th street, between E and F, is among the dead. Mellissa Adams, 7th street, between G and H, dead. Maggie Eckloff had her back slightly injured by jumping from a window, but is not otherwise injured. Emma Knott had her back, face and hands badly burned. Johanna Connor, who lived on English Hill, was among those burned to death, but her remains were subsequently recognized by a portion of dress which remained upon her unconsumed. The whole top of her head was, however, gone, and the brain was visible; and but for the fragment of dress it would have been impossible to recognize her. Julia McKewen, corner 4% and F streets, Island, supposed to be among the killed. Ellen Roche, also supposed to be killed. Rebecca Hull, badly burned about the head; taken home, corner of 5th and K streets north, and subsequently died. Bridget Dunn, East Capitol street, supposed to be killed. Search was made for Margaret Cush-man, who lives on the Island, but it is now positively ascertained that she arrived at her home safe. Mrs. Tippett, living at corner of 4% and G streets south was among the burned Kate Bresnahan, C street, between 3d and 4%, and Susan Harris, who lived on the Island, are supposed to be among the killed. Minnie Mitchell was badly burned about the face and arms, but was taken home, and will probably

The scenes while the fire was in progress was truly heart-rending. Those who could, jumped from the windows, and many of them fainted as soon as they alighted on the ground. By the heroism of some persons present, some of the girls who were enveloped in flames, lady ran out of the building with her dress all in flames, and was at once seized by a gentleman, who, in order to save her, plunged her into the river. He, however, burned his hands and arms badly in the effort. Three others, also in flames, started to run up the hill, and the upperpart of their clothing was torn off by two gentlemen near by, who thus probably saved the girls from a horrid death, but in the effort, they too were badly injured. Thirteen girls ran upon a tug at the Arsenal wharf, and were carried around to the 6th street wharf. where their friends took them in charge.

THE INQUEST. Coroner Woodward having been summoned by a dispatch from Major Benton, arrived a little after four o'clock, and summoned the following jury of inquest, viz:—Asbury Lloyd, foreman; James Lawrenson, Thos. E. Lloyd, Robert H. Graham; Herman G. Lorch, Thos. Taylor, Wm. H. Lusby, S. H. Ingersoll, W. H. Rutzer, F. A. Boswell, Wm. H. Gibson and Joseph Pullin Joseph Pullin.

The canvas covering the remains was then removed, and a most terrible sight presented itself to the view of those standing around. The charred remains of seventeen dead bodies lay scattered about, some in boxes, some on pieces of boards, and some in large tin pans, they having been removed from the ruins in these receptacles. In nearly every case only the trunk of the body remained, the arms and legs being missing or detached. In one case, however, that of a young girl, every shred of dress had been burned from her but her gaiter shoes, which had singularly escaped a touch of the flames. It is probable that some pertion of the rubbish fell over her feet, protecting them from the flames. We believe the body has since been identified by her friends through these shoes. A singular feature of the sad spectacle was that presented by a number of the bodies nearly burned to a cinder being caged, as it were, in the wire of their hooped skirts.

These bodies seemed more badly burned than those not thus enveloped in hoops, and it is probable that the expansion of the dress by the hoops afforded facilities for the flames to fasten upon them with fatal effect. We would suggest, in this connection, that operatives working in such dangerous localities, should by all means wear non-combustive clothing. Cloth washed in alum water is said to be fire-proof.

Many of the bodies seemed to have been' crisped quite bloodless; the flesh, where exposed, being perfectly white, while in others, the red blood visible, showed that they had been exposed to a less terrible degree of heat. One body, which bore some vestiges of clothing about the loins, by which it had been identified, had upon it a paper placard, with the words, "This is Johanna O'Conner." In a box was collected together a large number of feet, hands, arms and legs, and portions of the bones of the head, which it would be impossible to recognize. When the bodies were uncovered, Mrs. Ar nold, who was standing by, and who is the mother of Mrs. Tippett, who was among the killed, fainted away at the ghastly sight, and was carried into a building near by.

The jury was then sworn, and the following testimony was elicited. testimony was elicited:

Thos. B. Brown, sworn.—Witness resides on 4% street, between M and N south, and is a pyrotechnist. Has been employed in the Arsenal since 1841, with the exception of a few months. Witness was present at the time of the explosion, standing with Major Stebbins and Mr. Cox. The fire communicated along the bench where the girls were at work. The girls were employed in "choking" cartridges, [Witness here explained that "choking" the cartridge is attaching it to the ball by a machine which fastens the end of the cartridge to the ball.] Witness was unable to recognize any of the bodies, but believed one of them to be Miss Dunn, who was of large size. The books were burnt up at the time. Witness could not tell how the accident occurred. The girls in the building were gumming and cho-king cartridges and labelling boxes. No rock-ets were being made in the building. The fire originated in the lower corner, near the fence, (southwest corner.) Witness had charge of the building which comprised these rooms—ene being used for choking cartridges, another for making boxes, and a third for making cylin-ders or cases. A rocket was in the building in ders or cases. A rocket was in the building in one of the drawers; there was not over three signal rockets in the house. Witness had some white stars lying in the sun in copper pans. These stars were composed of chlorate of pot-ash, nitrate of stroncia and copul, but no sulphur. [Witness explained the composition of the stars at length.] These pans were placed in the sun between 8 and 9 o'clock in the morning, and the explosion took place about ten min-nutes to 12. Witness had not been cautioned by any one about the stars, of which he had two colors out; red and white. Witness could not say whether the explosion originated from the stars or the cartridges. When witness noticed the explosion he started to come out, but the jar in a measure forced him out. Witness stated that the stars were made for shell, and that they would not explode by concussion. These stars were not made in the building which was destroyed, but in a small building some distance of, and were then brought up to dry. There was no other work but what he had named carried on in the building destroyed; the orders being strictly against it. There were about 104 females engaged in building, but not in one room. The stars were about thirty or thirty-five feet from it. Witness did not know that the stars exploded, but saw one of the pans afterwards overturned.

Maj. Benton.—"If the stars exploded there would be a white denosit."

would be a white deposit."

The pan was exhibited to the jury, and a white deposit was found in it. Mr. Brown continued :- There were several hundred stars in each pan. Witness had frequently dried them in the sun before—even in August—but no accident had heretofore occurred. Witness proceeded to give the ingredients of the red stars, (those he referred to placed the stars so near the building in such quantity. [Witness here exhibited a plan of the building, and explained what each part was used for.] He had heard that one of the girls working at the table where the fire first caught had escaped.

Major Benton here described the manner in which the ball cartridges were placed by the girls while at work, the pointed ball being towards the body, and indicated the opinion that at the time of the explosion more or less injury was done to the girls by their being struck by these balls as the cartridges exploded. The of inion of wimess was that the stars, lying on a black metallic surface, which naturally ab-sorbs the heat, were exploded by spontaneous combustion. There were seven wounded, three of whom will likely die, and there have been seventeen bodies gotten out already. Witness considered Mr. Brown a careful man, but it was certainly imprudent to place any quantity of stars together on the pans. Gen. Ramsay informed him that stars had been heretofore dried in the same place. Witness did not know whether Mr. Brown knew that the stars would explode by spontaneous combustion. Brown is not a scientific man, but a good practical chemist, and he had found him a very compe-

Mr. Brewn continued stating that the in-gredients used in the stars were not the same as laid down in Maj. Benton's manual, being a composition of his own that he considered less dangerous. Witness did hot think the stars could be ignited by concussion.

Maj. Jas. G. Benion, sworn. Witness is commandant of the Arsenal. Was not present when the explication took place, but reached the spot soon after, and took steps to prevent the spread of the flames to the other buildings.

By the time witness arrived all those inside must have been dead. Witness had seen the pans, and they indicated that an explosion had taken place from them. There was an explosion of rockets during the fire. Witness had frequently examined the building to see that all was right, and had frequently cautioned Mr. Brown, not- because he was careless, but as a precautionary measure, knowing the great importance of being careful. Witness thinks that it was an oversight that Mr. Brown doors to the building.

Henry Seufferle, sworn.—Witness was employed in the building, and at the time was looking towards the south end of the building, when he saw a blaze come in the window, and he immediately halloaed at the top of his voice, and rushed out while the flame was spreading around. He pushed two young ladies off the porch who were washing their hands. Wit-ness ran off a little distance, and turning, saw two gentlemen bringing away Miss Sarah Gunnell, who was badly burned. Witness saw the stars in the morning, in three pans, containing perhaps two or three hundred each.

After the explosion he did not see these stars.

Witness could not recognise any of the bodies.

Andrew Cox. sworn.—Witness is an assistant tent man in his business. There were three to Mr. Brown, and was present when the ac-cident occurred. Witness was standing talk-ing with Major Stebbins and Mr. Brown when some one gave the alarm, and saw a light pass before the window, and he thought the explosion had occurred in another building. Wit-ness immediately made his escape from the building. Witness saw the stars in three large pans-there were about eight or nine hundred. There were about thirty girls at work in the Witness now looked at the plan of the building and stated that on the south side of the table which ran east and west, the following girls were at work :- Maggie Yonson, Julia McKewen, Miss Dunn, Kate horan, Mrs. Tippett, Johanna Conner, Ellen Roach, Willie Webster, Susie Harris, Bettie Branagan, Eliza Braylor, Eliza Lacey, Sarah Gunnell, Minnie Mitchell, Emma Baird. On the opposite side were Mrs. Bresnahan, Miss Lloyd, Melissa Adams, Kate Paimer, Rebecca Hull, Annie Bache, Catharine Goldsmith, Dena Clements, Florence Kennedy, and Jane Shilds There may have been some others which witness could not recollect. The books and rolls were had probably five hundred cartridges before her, each containing 70 grains of powder-the points of the balls were pointing towards them.

Edward M. Stebbins, sworn.—Witness is paymaster and military storekeeper at the post, and was present at the time. Witness was sitting at the table and saw something flying about out of doors, and walked out. The fire communicated at once te the building. Witness burst the doors open. Two boxes exploded. Witness helped about forty girls from the building, some on fire, and he wrapped a tarpaulin about them and extinguished the flames. When witness came out of the building he saw the stars flying about, and he thinks some flew as far as the river, (about forty feet.) There was no loose powder in the room unless a cartridge had been broken. The stars were usually dried where these were set, and these had been out two or three weeks. Witness does not think that any girls on the south side of the gun-carriage shop, and at the time was in an outbuilding and looking directly towards the building which was destroyed. Before the building caught witness saw fire-works back of it explode, and thought at the time that Mr. Brown was setting off fire-works. The next moment the whole building was in a blaze. The coroner here stated that there were several other witnesses who could testify in several other witnesses who could testify in relation to the accident, but the jury expressed hemselves satisfied with what evidence had the bench could have got from their seats.

Clinton Thomas, sworn .- Witness works in been given in, but some who could identify the bodies might be called. Charles S. Curtain testified that he recognized among the bodies that of his sister-in-law, Jobanna Conner, by a small portion of her dress on the remains, and her belt. She was a poor girl, the daughter of a widow, whose husband was killed while working in Arsenal by sun stroke two years since.

Barthelemew McCarthy also identified. Miss

Conner's body.

Mrs. Honora Murphy identified the body of her sister, Margaret Horan, by portions of her clothing and some ornaments found about it. The evidence here closed, and the jury retired to the Commandant's office, where, after mature deliberation they returned the following verdict in each case: "That the body of a female came to her death by the explosion of the laboratory of the Washington Arsenal, where she was employed choking cartridges; that the said explosion took place about ten minutes to 12 m., and it was caused by the superintendent, Thomas B Brown, placing three metallic pans some thirty feet from the laboratory, containing chemical preparations intended for the manufacture of white and red stars; that the sun's rays operating on the metallic pans caused apontaneous combustion, scattering the first spontaneous combustion, scattering the fire in every direction, a portion flying into the choking room of the laboratory through the open windows, igniting the cartridges and causing the death of the said deceased. The jury are of the opinion that the superintendent, Thomas B. Brown, was guilty of the most culpable carelessness and negligence in placing highly combustible substances so near a building filled with human beings, indicating a most received with human beings, indicating a most reckless disregard for life, which should be severely rebuked by the Government. They also find that the deceased had no property." [In the cases of the two recognized bodies, instead of using the term "a female," the verdict was made to read, "the body of Johanna Conner, aged about 20 years, and Margaret Horan."—Reporter.]

. CASUALTIES. Miss Kate Palmer, residing on 12th street, between C and D, Island, was hurt by a piece of iron sticking in her neck as she jumped from Miss Kidwell, residing on M street south, between 4% and 6th, was badly burned about the head, face, and arms, but will probably recover. The heat through which Miss Kidwell passed was intense, as some scraps of lead well passed was intense, as some scraps of lead were found to have been melted on her clothes and body. When being carried home she said to her friends, "When I saw the blaze I threw my hands over my face, and saved my eyes."

As soon as the friends of Miss Conner and Miss Horan had identified the bodies they made a request to take them away, which was granted, and boxes were procured in which straw was placed, and the charred remains were placed therein amid the sobs and screams of some of their female acquaintances, and conveyed in a wagon to their residences, those
